Singer Wany a victim of cybercrime

SINGER Wany Hasrita (pic) became a victim of cybercrime when someone transferred out almost RM2,000 from her bank account, reported Harian Metro.

The Terlalu Memuja singer said that she had received a suspicious phone call from an unknown man asking her for help.

“He claimed that he put in the wrong phone number to pay for PTPTN.

“At the same time, I received text message of a Transaction Authorisation Code (TAC) from my bank although I didn’t apply for it,” she said.

Wany then blocked the man’s phone number and logged in to her online bank account to check on transactions.

“I was shocked to see that there was payment of RM1,850 to the account of a fibre optic Internet service provider.

“I immediately called my bank to report the transaction and the Internet company also returned my money,” she said.

Having learned from her experience, Wany urged others to be careful with any suspicious online activity.

“If you get a suspicious phone call or message from an unknown individual, do not answer it.

“Immediately change your online banking password to block their access to your account and report to the bank’s customer service department,” she said.

> The daily also reported that despite being a constant victim of body shaming, Azfar Firdaus, an albino, had risen above the adversi-ties to let his talents shine.

The 25-year-old part-time model said that he was often made a victim of body shaming because he was born an albino.

“People view albinism as something weird. Actually, being an albino differentiates me from everyone else and gives me an advantage.

“Since I was in school, my peers would look at as me as weird.

“Sometimes I would feel down but when I think about it, maybe they felt weird because they never found a special person like me.”
